A VERY OLD CHESTNUT

FOUND IN THE GARRET OF A NEW YORK TENEMENT HOUSE.

The Closing Chapters of a Sensational Story That Was Begun in England. New York, November 2.—The New York Herald has found the Tichborne claimant in a pit able state of illness and poverty. He was in a little room over a small optician's shop in Fourth He has been lying there on his back for more than two months, suffering the pains of blood poisoning and the thousand nameless ills of payerty. Whether he be Sir Roger Tichborne, grievous y unfortunate baronet, Arthur Orton, or Thomas Castro, the Australian butcher, this man's life has been a strange, eventful history. The ant was one of the most celebrated on record, and fifteen yes; sgo it made a great stir in the world. But the world soon forgets. Last July so few people remembered the case that scarcely a corporal's guard could be mustered in a theater to hear the claimant tell his The tale, in brief, is this: In 1858 Roger Tichborne, eldest son of Sir James Tichborne, having fallen in love with his cousin, Kate Doughty, and got into much trouble with his family thereby, sold out his commission in the army and went to South America. He wandered about that country for nearly a year, leading an adventurous life, and in April, 1854, he embarked at Rio on the ship Balla for Kingston. The Bella left port on the 20th of April and never was seen afterward. Bits of wreckage were picked up six days after she sailed, and the Bella was stricken off the books at Lloyds. Everybody but Lady Tichborne believed that Roger's bones were whitening in Davy Jones's locker, a hundred fa homs deep, off the Brazilian cast. Sir James died in 1862, and Lady Tichberse began to advertise for her eldest son. In 1867 a man called Thomas Castro, who had been a butcher near Sydney, turned up in England, said that he was Roger Charles Tichborne, and instituted suits to recover the Tichborne and Doughty estates, worth £75,000 a year. He failed to establish his claim, was tried for perjury, convicted and sentenced to fourteen years' penal servitude. But by many his story was still believed, and his counsel, Mr. Kenealy, never abandoned the conviction that the claimant was the legal heir to the Tichborne estates. A Tichborne Release Association was formed, and popular subscriptions were started to defray the expenses of hunting up missing links of evidence and reopening the case. When the fourteen years of imprisonment had expired the claim ant came out, still calling himself Tichborne, and began a lecturing tour to raise money. Naturally he turned his face toward the Mecca of all English men who hope to make money out of whatever fame or notoriety they may have acquired. Visions of crowded houses, large receipts and a triumphal tour allured him. A beggarly account of empty benches greeted him, and he dropped out of sight in a few days. His triends were soon exhausted, and no manager could be found to take the risk of piloting him through the country. So one morning the claimant paid his botel bill and disappeared. Misfortune fol-lowed him into the humble ledg-ing to which he retreated with his wife. A child was born to them and in a month it died. Then the claimant fell ill and was disabled from doing anything for a living. He made a few dolla's by writing—or providing the facts for somebody else to write—stories of life Come winding, wandering slow in the Australian diggings for the newspapers, but his tales were not successful. Then the claimant's wife, a young woman who had been a singer in London, sought an engagement under an assumed name, and for a few weeks she sang and danced in the concert balls of the Bowery, earning just enough to live upon. She admitted your correspondent to the room, which served as bedroom, parlor and kitchen, where the ponderous form of the claimant was stretched upon the bed. Disease and worry have left their marks upon the man, but he is still anything but emsciated. A thin growth of gray hair and beard surround his heavy countenance, but he bears bis 60 years as well as most men. He seemed giad to see a visitor. and talked freely about his affairs. "I thought I was going to get out to day," he said, "but just as I was about to dress, in popped the doc-tor and ordered me back to bed. I've been here eight weeks now, and he says I must stay two or three weeks more. I want to get to work soon, you know, because doctor's services are expensive, and taking medicine is like drinking gold, My wife has been earning something to support us, but she has no engagement now. She was to have begun one of the gardens again, but the police have arrested the managers and closed their places; so that is at an end." The claimant's wife, who, if his cause be just, is entitled to call herself Lady T chborne and ought to be living in the luxury of an expensive English establishment, is a slight, dark woman of the type commonly seen on the variety stage. Her accomplishments consist of the knowledge of a few songs and the ability to dance. To these are added no great charms of personal appearance. She is merely commonplace. But the quiet, appretentions woman seems devoted to the elephantine enigma whose misfortunes she shares. All the work of the humble house keeping falls apon her. She takes care of the sick man, cooks the meals and does all the little things that fall to the lot of a poor man's wife. The heavy, somewhat stolid countenance of the claimant lights up with a kindly smile when he sprake to her. He was divorced from his first wife in England, but in the variety actress he seems to have found a congenia mate. A singular thing about the claimant is his ability to make one believe in his earnestness. If he be the greatest humbug of the age, he is the most persistent and consistent. Fourteen years in prison have not dampened his spirits or turned him from his purpose. He talks as though he were the undisputed heir to the estates, and asserts that he will reopen the case as soon as he can collect the necessary fund. Parlament passed an act confirming the verdict of the jury, but he says that can be set aside easily because only nine members were in the House when the bill went through, and the law requires forty to be present. In the old case he says had the Jesuits against him. They me again. The religious feeling that made the contest so bitter before will be wanting next time. You see that when I was a young man I offended Bishop Grant by threatening to make a billiard room out of the chapel on the estate, and I suppose my out rageous conduct, as they called it, made the Church my namy." Regarding the Tichborne Relief Association and its work, he says: "In 1877 the association collected £40,000 to be used in my behalf, but as true as I am here I never got one cent of it. What became of the money can only be surmised." Evidently the claimant has not been helped much by the association. Daubtless some of the money was used in searching for evidence and keeping up the interest in the case. It is claimed that the log of the Osprey, the mysterious barken-tine that eluded all the efforts of detectives to discover her history and whereabouts during the trial, has been obtained from the mate, McKsy, and is now in the porses sion of Secretary Gray, of the asso-ciation. It is upon this shadowy log of a phantom ship that the claimant bases his hopes of reversing the judg-ment of Lord Cockburn and the acts of Parliament, and establishing his identity as Roger Charles Tichborne. Meanwhile he is growing old in poverty and planning impossible tours, with a combination of variety per-formers to fill his empty purse. He is not an entertaining lecturer, but he labors under the delusion that he can held audiences spell-bound for hours with his powers of oratory and the narrative of his strange career. The little concert hall singer sticks to him, believes in him, and does her best to lighten the load of his adversity, hoping for better times by and by, when the one poer room shall be ex changed for beronial halls. Beath of a Venerable Lady—Her Bo quests to the Church.

NASHVILLE, TENN., November 2. The Banner announces the death of Mrs. Ann Pope, a well known and much esteemed resident of that city, on Salurday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, sged S5. She was the widow of Gen. John Pope, of Florence, Als., and since the death of her hosband she resided in Nashville. She was a devoted Christian, and was for more than half a century a member of the Presbyterian Church. She was a liberal contributor to church and charitable purposes in this city, and in her will bequeathed to the First Presbyterian Church of Nashville a note for $10,000 for money borrowed of her. She leaves to the Cottage Presbylerian Church $2000, and to the Bible Society and Mrs. Louise Morgan the house and lot on Spruce street where she lived, which is valued at $15,000. The wil in addi-tion gives Mrs. Gibson $2000; Miss Elliot, $1000; the deacons of the First Presbyterian Church, for the benefit of the poor, $1000, and Edgar Jones, $8000. There were several other legacies, and then a specification that what was left should be divided up equaly between the Cottage Preebyterian Church and the descon's fund of her church. The whole amount of her wealth at the time of her death was over $30,000. Edgar Jones and Joe O'Bryan were appointed her ex-ecutors. She made a special request that her body be taken in charge by the deacons of the First Presbyterian Church. The funeral services were held at the First Presbyterian Church yesterday afternoon, conducted by the Rev. Jere Witherspoon and the Rev. J. H. McNeilly.

AS I CAME DOWN FROM LEBANON

- As I came down from Lebanon,
 Come winding, wandering slowly down,
 Through mountain passes bleak and brown,
 The cloudless day was well nigh done.
 The city, like an opal set
 In emerald, showed each minaret
 Afre with radiant beams of sun,
 And glistened orange, fig and lime
 Where song birds made melodious chime,
 As I came down from Lebanon.

- As I came down from Lebanon.
 Likelava in the golden glow.
 Likelava in the golden glow.
 Through olive orchards far below
 I saw the murmuring river run;
 And 'neath the wall usen the sand
 Swart sheiks from distant Samarcand,
 With precious spices they had won,
 Lay long and languidly in wait
 Till they had passed the guarded gate,
 As I came down from Lebanon.
- As I came down from Lebanon
 I saw strange men from lands afar
 In mosque and square and gay bazaar;
 The Magi that the Moslem shun,
 And grave Effendi from Stamboul,
 Who sherbet sipped in corners cool,
 And from the balconies o strum
 With roses, gleamed the eyes of those
 Who dwell in still seragiles,
 As I came down from Lebanon.
- As I came down from Lebanon
 The firming glow of daytime died,
 And Night, arrayed as is a bride
 Of some great king in garments spun
 Of purple and the finest gold,
 Outbloomed in glories manifold,
 Until the moon, above the dun
 And darkening deerit, void of shade,
 Shone like a keen Bamascus blade,
 As I came down from Lebanon.

A Husband and Pather Burned to Death.

CLEVELAND, O., November 1 .- At an early hour this morning the house of Louis L. Cheichner, at Steubenville, O., took fire in the Lower floor. The family slept upstairs, and they were not awakened until the flames had gained considerable headway. Cheichner opened the stair door to go down but was overcome by heat and smoke, and falling down stairs, was burned to death. His wife and children escaped by leaping from a window in their night clothes.

Revenue Men Capture Bogus Butter, Sr. Louis, Mo., November 2 -- Un-der the new oleomargarine law, which went into effect yesterday, many seizures of bogus butter were made by the internal revenue officers. The latter began their work early in the day and went from house to house testing butter and confiscating all but the genuine article. Before the day had closed seizares were made at several different piaces

The meeting of the City Conneil to be held tomorrow will be an important one for the railroads. The question of the belt line right of way will be discussed, and the Missouri Pacific will make application for right of way

Judge R. J. Morgan, the attorney of the company, speaking of the matter yesterday, said: "We do not sak much. All we desire an entrance, and I think the member of the City Government are fevorably disposed toward us. Mr. Gould was very kindly treated when he visited the city and assured of the existence of a dispositien to extend him equal facilities with other railroads. The crossing, which, as you know, will be made at a point considerably lower down than that of the Kansas City Company, will be much more advantageous, l will be much more advantageous, I think. The ascent from the river bank will be 20 per cent. easier, an advantage of no little importance. I am much pleased with the grounds the company recently purchased. There are about ten acres in the p'at. It cost more than the grounds of the Kansas City company, because properly is higher now than it was then, and I am inclined to believe, too, that so far as clined to believe, too, that so far as yards are concerned we have the ad-vantege over most of the other roads."

"What have you done with your "Nothing as yet. We are anxious to get the right of way into the city firs', and then we will take up the beit line and talk about a union depot,

"What is your idea about the loca tion of a depot?"

"The Missouri Pacific would prefer to have it situated somewhere in the eastern portion of the city, but I am obliged to confess that it looks now as if South Memphis were the proper place to put it. The depots of seven companies are all in that locality and within a stone's throw of each other In fact, the Louisville and Nashville is the only line which would be put to any expense should it be built on Cal-houn street."

Will P. Wildberger.

There are few young railroaders in this neck of the words more deserved-ly popular than Mr. W. P. Wildber-ger, who has for some time been acting as private secretary to Manager Fink of the Memphis and Little Rock railroad. He has accepted he offer of chief clerk in the general office of the International and Great Northern and Missouri, Kansas and Western railroads, and leaves today for Palestice, Tex., where he will enter at once upon the discharge of his duties. has been faithful, earnest and intelli-gent in the discharge of every position he has ever been called upon to fill, and his promotion comes naturally, as a matter of course. Considerable interes: bas been excited by reports of the rapid construction of the Fayetteville and Little Rock railroad, which, according to ra-mor, has the backing of the Frisco, and will be on very friendly terms with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe. This road is to be constructed from Fayetteville to Argenta, across the river from Little Rock. About twenty five miles of the grade is finished, and it is to be completed to St. Paul, in Madison county, by January

1st. Southern Bail road Development. A great stride toward improvement has been made in the South within the past few years. Not to particular ize too tediously, it may be pointed out that in the Southers group of States, as classified in Poor's Manual, the mileage increased from 12,978 in 1879 to 20,584 miles in 1885, an improvement uncouslied anywhere, exin the Western group of Sates. Besides this the gauge of many of the roads has only recently been made to conform to the standard, and in other ways many of the Southern companies are fully alive to the necessities of the times. Bemelish the Stove.

The coal stove and the kerosene lamp should be excluded by law from railroad passenger cars, and every car should carry the best appliances for breaking open a car and extinguish-ing fire. Immediately after the collision at Spuyten Duyvil, in 1882, the negligence of railroad companies with regard to these things was denounced in many official utterances. "The present means of heating and lighting railway cars," said Gov. Cornell in his special message, "is a standing menace to the lives of passengers." By the coroner's jury the officers of the Cen-tral road were sharply censured for not providing implements to be used in rescuing passengers and means for extinguishing fire. A grand jury sit ting in the following month made a presentment, in which the use of min-eral oil in car lamps was opposed, and in which it was said that "the heating of cars by direct radiation from stoyes with coal fires should be abolished and appliances should be introduced for heating by steam, hot air or hot water, to be conducted into the cars by pipes and colls from reservoirs out-side the cars."
